

Column:
LONDON
Cake and Art: The Perfect Combination!

Soho is famous for its nightlife, sex shops and film industry, but there is more to it. We recently found out about this lovely little cake shop in Greek Street called Maison Bertaux. You cannot walk by this place and look at their cakes without being dragged in by an unexplainable force that makes you want to buy every piece of cake in the shop! You might have to wait a few minutes (or half an hour) but you will be treated to one of the best pieces of cheese- or chocolate cake you have ever tasted.

Even though the paintings were lovely, the poems written on the walls were even more enjoyable. Every five minutes you would hear another person giggling over yet another of Noel's riddles. One of my favourites was the one in which he described his girlfriend: "The girl I love is called Dee, she wears cowboy hats and tight trousers, just like me!" How can you not love this man?!

When I went there last week, I was not only delighted by the sugary treats they have to offer, but also by the amazing art by the star of the Mighty Boosh: Noel Fielding. Anyone who does not know the Mighty Boosh or Noel Fielding has to stop reading this now, be ashamed of him or herself and go to play.com and order the whole series on dvd!

As me and my roommates are all major fans of the Boosh and not a day goes by without someone quoting Old Gregg or the Moon we were extremely happy we got to enjoy watching his paintings while drinking tea and eating cake. What more can you ask for!

This piece of writing may start to sound as an advert for both the Mighty Boosh and Maison Bertaux, but no, I do not get paid for this by the BBC, nor will I get a free cake, it was just a delightful day of which I wanted to share the memories with you. Just in case they do get to read this and consider providing me with cakes for the rest of my life: go eat cake in Soho next time you are in London!

Love, Lesley